

Help us protect Florida's historic places.

People and organizations from around the state who work to support Florida's history and heritage have come together to say funding for the protection of these places makes a positive difference for Florida. Preservation Grants can give historic places a future.

Crouched on a strip of land buffeted by the Atlantic, a 148-year-old life saving station for shipwreck survivors now needs help maintaining its roof, built with a series of other similar stations along the Atlantic coast, as it is the last to remain. A 98-year old Theatre in Tampa needs critical attention if is to maintain some of its most important features that made it so iconic. Both of these places are on the FY2025 Special Category Historic Preservation Grant list, which, if funded, could provide a future for 36 important pieces of Florida's unique history.

About the grants.

The Florida Division of Historical Resources Historic Preservation Grant program is one of the most significant ways the state protects our irreplaceable historic places, strengthens communities and supports local economies.

Grants assist local, regional and statewide efforts to preserve significant historic and archaeological resources, support archaeological excavations and develop and create museum exhibits sharing knowledge and appreciation of Florida history. The Florida Historical Commission reviews and ranks Special Category grants to create the annual list, which is then approved by the Florida Secretary of State and sent to the Legislature to determine funding.

Support historic places in your community, and statewide, by fully funding the FY2025 Historic Preservation Grant list.
